RE: NMDWS/NMICC/NMACC Request for Collaborative Application for Department of Labor for National Dislocated Worker Grant Program Option B/Economic Recovery Dislocated Worker Grants,

During this unprecedented time of job loss and economic uncertainty for displaced workers, the New Mexico Independent Community Colleges (NMICC) stand ready to assist the U.S. Department of Labor with an immediate, agile, and creative response to the unique challenges of our funding need. The collaborative application process will allow for joint application between these groups of higher education institutions and the New Mexico Department of Workforce Solutions for funds available through the U.S. Department of Labor's National Dislocated Worker Grant Program.

NMICC was formed in 2006 to support the mission of independently governed community colleges in New Mexico. NMICC is composed of 12 independent college institutions that have a significant community college mission.

NMICC is well-positioned to support the growing number of workers displaced by the COVID-19 pandemic. New Mexico Independent Community Colleges annually serve more than 35,000 students in college credit courses, including 10,000 college students who are enrolled in NMICC institutions. In addition to college credit courses, NMICC institutions serve thousands more through Adult Basic Education, non-credit courses, technical training courses, certificate/credentials programs, and a comprehensive array of workforce development programs.

The New Mexico Association of Community Colleges (NMACC) comprises ten branch community colleges that serve over 20,000 students. NMACC provides quality higher education to students in the state's rural and urban areas, creating a learning environment fostering student achievement. In addition, and simultaneously, NMACC also provides dual credit enrollment, college transfer, language, career preparation, and community colleges. The NMICC and NMACC colleges have proactively, aggressively, and effectively responded to the challenges brought on by this COVID-19 pandemic.

In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, the NMICC and NMACC colleges have proactively, aggressively, and effectively responded to the challenges brought on by this COVID-19 pandemic. The NMICC and NMACC colleges have leveraged their existing resources, which are both online and hybrid, and WIOA funding, will address the needs of the many displaced workers that are anticipated in New Mexico over the next month and possible years. Leveraging our collective resources, the two colleges will continue to provide wrap-around services for current students and newly displaced workers who will need immediate support, such as emergency scholarships, career counseling, academic advising, professional development, internships, apprenticeships, and employer partnerships.

New Mexico's unemployment rate has risen from 3.5% before the coronavirus outbreak. Since March 13, it has risen to 5.9% and is still rising. Over 125,000 New Mexicans have filed for unemployment out of a total workforce of just over 800,000. With thousands of new unemployment claims being filed weekly, and about half of the state's current workforce at high risk of losing their job due to the small business slowdown, there is an opportunity push of unprecedented scale. Using their extensive experience in workforce training capabilities, flexible and affordable academic and non-academic programs, strong connections with industry partners throughout the state, and supporting resources, NMICC and NMACC colleges are in a strong position to lead the effort to re-skill recent displaced workers for the most high need and high demand employment opportunities that currently exist and will become available over the coming months.

As a group, the colleges are prepared to quickly ramp-up the availability of online courses that fit immediate workforce needs, such as healthcare, education, pre-employment and business services, construction, and manufacturing. The consortium of colleges will also collaborate to explore competency-based education (CBE) and credit learning (CPL) options for programs that provide retraining opportunities for displaced workers. NMICC and NMACC are also working to issue college credit degrees across all fields of study. New programs will be developed in response to the immediate needs of New Mexico industry and employers, thus enabling any displaced worker anywhere in the state to learn what they need to know to quickly re-enter the workforce and succeed.

Both individually and combined, the NMICCC and NMACC have proven track records of successfully managing large-scale, multi-million-dollar grant-funded projects.

Recent consortium project success includes a Department of Labor (DOL) “Skilled Workforce Assistance Community College and Career Training” (SAACCT) grant which created the “Skill-UP Network Pathways Acceleration in Technology and Healthcare” (SUN-PATH) project. In partnership with the New Mexico Department of Health and Healthcare Employers, the SUN-PATH project expanded and improved health-related training opportunities for students, allowing for more training curriculums, industry-recognized degrees and certificates, and industry-recognized credits earned by participating students, and helped to improve employment outcomes in healthcare fields. The SUN-PATH project development, execution, lessons learned, and resulting successes will serve as a model for partnerships, communication, and collaboration among the NMICCC and NMACC colleagues.

During this unprecedented time of economic distress, increased uncertainty, and severe job losses, NMICCC and NMACC are available to support the current workforce funding available through the Nationalized Worker Grant Program. Mexico, in particular, is eligible through the Nationalized Worker Grant Program can provide vital funding during this period of economic distress. The consortium of NMICCC and NMACC is committed to working with NMDWS to find mutually agreed-upon solutions to assist New Mexicans in obtaining the high-quality training assistance they need to help create and be successful in the new economy.

We hope you will consider applying for consideration of a proposal to the Department of Labor for Displaced Worker Grant funding.

Sincerely,

Katherine L. Ulibarri
